

We've received the 1970s represented in Carly Rae Jepsen's Joan Jett hairstyle and the disco-impressed dance-membership glitter scene. We've obtained the 1980s within the poofy-sleeved ballgowns and huge hair-items on the funeral. Carly Rae Jepsen's video for "Boy Problems," directed by fashion photographer and designer Petra Collins, steps up the pop-glam and the femme style, from tiaras to pink ballgowns to laptops slathered with sparkly stickers. After watching this video, best hair styling tool I feel I purchase Jia Tolentino's theory that "Boy Problems" might be about queer self-discovery. On this case I think the funeral is for the narrator's "Boy Problems," which she plans to leave behind in favor of specializing in the ladies in her life. You'd suppose with a reputation like "Boy Problems," Jepsen's video would function no less than one boy, however instead, the video focuses fully on its heroine and her feminine associates. At the very least, it appears to be about realizing that your relationship along with your girlfriends (romantic subtext or not) should take precedence over "Boy Problems," which is why the scenes deal with the gals at a slumber get together, lounging by the pool, at a funeral, at the office (where Rookie founder Tavi Gevinson makes a cameo because the boss), and at a dance membership.
